Panel 5

“The Role of the Interreligious Dialogue in the Development of Dialogue Community”

(Hall “Kassos”)

Interreligious dialogue is founded on the significance of religious dimension in human life. Common efforts of various confessional institutions are currently required to prevent possible speculations based on religious differences and aimed at achievement of certain political targets.

The values of personal religious conscience for interreligious dialogue are actualized through debates between faith and knowledge. Special attention is paid to contemporary processes in interreligious and social dialogue which has been initiated in the European Union.

Main Vectors of Discussion:

- Faith and knowledge in understanding of human development values;
- Religious dimension of life and administrative-legal relations;
- Religious institutes and power structures in present period.
- Contemporary interreligious dialogue initiatives of traditional Churches in European Union

Round Table 3

Civilizational Paradigm of Human Evolution

(Hall “Patmos”-“Kos”)

Despite the general confidence that there is an understanding of what a civilization is, such unambiguity is nonexistent. This notion can be disclosed through sociocultural types, is interpreted as the staging of human development, or as geographically localized human communities.

In the meantime, there are different contexts for the practical objectives and goals that scientists and government leaders face, where such an understanding should be profound and clear. The temporal (stadial) and spacial aspects of the genesis of civilization are intertwined in a complex way making the picture even more blurred.

Various civilizations can objectively dominate, thus posing threat of universalization escalating to the racist theories of the past or aggressive forms of the present-day globalization. However, civilizations can also be a depository of optimal development practices for the whole regions.

A civilization is obviously a form of human community which played and still plays a subjective role in history. However, major changes come with human evolution. Once, civilizations were born, later, there was a time for their confrontation and the futurology of civilizational wars. What lies ahead of civilizations? Will the principle of separation ever turn into its opposite – a uniform human civilization? What will it be like and what are its values, do they exist? Where does the dialogue of civilizations lead? A wide range of issues, from fundamental theoretical up to vital practical, will be addressed at the roundtable meeting.

Main Vectors of Discussion:

- Provided civilizations are human communities, when were they born, what factors form them, are these factors long-standing and will they continue to exist in future?
- What is the universal criterion of human progress and how is it linked to the value bases of various civilizations?
- Is the convergence of civilizations into the uniform human civilization in the course of future megaevolution feasible (if so, when)?
- How are the secular and the religious visions of human differences and their future interrelated?

Round Table 4

Atom in the 21st Century: Problems and Prospects

(Hall “TV-Room”)

An essential element of sustainable human development is its’ energy security. The perspective growth of energy production, especially in developing countries must be securely backed up by the fuel management and waste storage, and on the other hand do not impair the environmental security of the world. In addition, limited amount of oil and gas can cause tension related to providing free access to energy resources. This is the global challenge of 21st century.

Nuclear power could be the solution to this problem, subject to international cooperation in the development of innovative reactor technologies of the future to ensure the safe and environmentally sound development of large-scale nuclear energy while reducing the risk of proliferation of nuclear weapons.

Roundtable meeting is aimed to discuss key issues in large-scale development of atomic energy such as nuclear non-proliferation, nuclear and physical security of irradiated nuclear fuel and radioactive waste in the context of globalization processes and intercivilizational dialogue.

Main Vectors of Discussion:

- Nuclear power and nuclear weapons is an inevitable dualism;
- Globalization and development of large-scale nuclear power;
- Nuclear safety and security Culture;
- Public dialogue and development of nuclear energy;
- Nuclear power engineering and developing world-prospects and challenges.

Round Table 5

Historical Heritage in the Dialogue of Civilizations

(Hall “Karpathos”)

There are many events of the past that may lead to tension and result in new conflicts. At the same time, the history contains extensive positive experience of cooperation, dialogue, resolution of conflicts, and this experience requires updating.

Mutual resentments, claims, dissensions and especially conflicts and wars remain in the actual memory of people for a long time. Not only they have saturated emotional coloring, but in a certain set of circumstances such confrontations may break out anew. Historical facts and events of this kind can be used by various civil or political structures for opportunistic aims.

The distribution of versions of historical events oriented at fanning the flame of conflicts, which is quite characteristic of mass-media and scientific environment these days, is counterproductive. Strengthened of cooperation in retrospective researches, mutual efforts to find the historical truth in all its depth and completeness, which is the basis for non-conflict perception of history, must become a constructive alternative to the adverse approach.

One of the vital goals of dialogue between civilizations is identification and mutual apprehension of both historical conflicts and experience of cooperation, knowledge of how to resolve a dissension.

Main Vectors of Discussion:

- The History of the Past As a Common Heritage of Peoples of the Globalized World;
- The History of the Russian Civilization and Its Experience in the Prevention of Intercivilization Conflicts;
- World Wars – Conflict Zones of Common History (Dedicated to the 65th Anniversary of the End of World War II);
- The Role of the Civil Society in the Formation of Historical Consciousness of People in the Modern World;
- Historical Education and Mass Historical Consciousness

Round Table 6

Regional Economic Integration within the Global Economic Crisis

(Hall “Rhodes”)

The regional economic integration becomes one of the most important components of the anti-crisis strategy, thus expanding the market of participating states and increasing economic resilience thereof. This provides for extending of economic territory through establishment of free trade areas as well as customs, monetary or economic unions. Availability of certain integrated associations considerably enhances development of participating national economies, increases resilience to any external shock, range of activity and competitive edges of corporations and enterprises thereof.

The crisis of 2008 put on the agenda a problem of required institutional integration both regionally and globally, thus forcing governments and business elites to seek actively any joint solution.

As from 2010 along with previously established and enhanced regional economic unions a customs union within the framework of the Eurasian Economic Community as well as a free trade area involving China and ASEAN member-states started to operate. The CIS states stepped up the process of the multipurpose free trade area establishment. Another discussion of issues related to integration was initiated in the Latin America.

The customs union involving Belarus, Kazakhstan and Russia is only the first breakthrough initiative. It is the basis for the establishment of the United Economic Area. The customs union an advanced and more profound form of economic integration allowing it to ensure free movement of goods, services, capital or human resources. For that purpose a number of ambitious targets shall be achieved as soon as practicable, in particular, harmonization of regulations related to foreign trading, macroeconomic policy or tax system criteria, antithesis and labour laws as well as migration policies of the member-states.

In addition to intensive negotiations involving experts and officials integrations requires an active dialogue among all interested parties.

The panel to be held as a public project launch shall provide for the appearance of certain officials of the customs union as well as those of the member-states, economic integration experts, representatives of business, media and social organizations.

Principal issues:

- Regional integration within the global economic crisis: efficiency potential
- Customs union of Belarus, Kazakhstan and Russia as an international project of integration (public presentation)

- From the customs union to the United Economic Area within the territory of CIS: challenges and prospects
